A new minjung theology is awaited and must be easily understandable and consumable to the public. Still, it needs to be truthful to the spirit of the first-generation minjung theology. In this seminar, however, I will select and test out some ideas including that of language and speech in the tradition of philosophical-psychoanalytical thought of Jacques Lacan and Alain Badiou, in order to find and interpret stories that contain the “language of the body” as opposed to the “language of the head” in our ordinary life. I believe it will also help understand the process of attaining the collective subjectivity/subjecthood of minjung in history.
